Russia-Ukraine News During the Cold War, most small countries tried to seek security assurances by taking refuge in some superpower, but the Russo-Ukraine war has put a question mark on the wisdom of joining an alliance like NATO.

Shriram Chaulia. Russia's invasion of Ukraine has raised an immediate question, what kind of world do we live in? There has been talk of 'global disorder' and 'headless world' for years, but now it is really starting to show. In the contemporary era, there was also a belief that due to the ever-increasing inter-economic interdependence and concepts like an increasingly interconnected world, there would be no major international conflicts in the 21st century and global peace would prevail except for sporadic incidents, but Ukraine's Kyiv and Kharkiv Like the fierce battle that broke out in densely populated cities, all these assumptions have been demolished. Violent international history, which had been taken as forgotten events of bygone centuries, now seems to be making a comeback.

The politics of domineering and power based geo-politics seems to be ringing. An institution like the United Nations, which is responsible for stopping this, has been losing its trust for many years. The weakness of the United Nations Charter and international law is becoming increasingly evident. In mocking them, only countries equipped with veto power like China, America and Russia have been at the fore.

In North and West Africa, the consequences of the illegal coup carried out by the United States and its European allies in Libya in 2011 are still being felt. The international community has also been unable to stop the military operations that Russia conducted in Georgia in 2008 and then in Crimea in 2014. In the so-called "civil wars" of Syria and Iraq for nearly a decade since 2011, both Western powers and Russia have separately assisted local fighters and illegally intervened in the name of eliminating Islamic State (IS). Even in the proxy war in Yemen since 2015, America, Russia and their allies have played a disastrous game there. Here in Asia, China, taking advantage of its power, China had no hesitation in encroaching upon India in eastern Ladakh in 2020 despite the Covid pandemic, a move that was a clear violation of bilateral international agreements between the two countries. All these examples show that the international order established after the Cold War is deteriorating over the last decade due to the mistreatment and deceit of the superpowers. The fate of Ukraine is like the last nail in the coffin. This is because, here indirectly or covertly, a big country, ie Russia, not only attacked a smaller country, i.e. Ukraine, but also openly attacked with the intention of coup and alleged disarmament.

behind China in the ranking of countries with 'massive national power' and has not been able to match the US, it, as well as China's leaders, have 'militarized' the concept of a so-called national renaissance. Both cite their past glory and historical grievances and seek to gain control over the territories of their neighboring countries by claiming them as their own. The US, on the other hand, is determined to maintain its global primacy in any case and does not want to accept territorial claims from Russia or China.

Russian President Vladimir Putin has been complaining against the eastern expansion of the NATO alliance since at least 2007, but the US did not listen. New NATO members continued to grow and deploy state-of-the-art weapons and forces along Russia's western borders. Russia's complaint against this pressure was justified, but it is legally and morally unfair to directly attack a sovereign country like Ukraine and express its intention to make it its puppet by describing it as an integral part of the historical Russian Empire. When Bahubali goes out of hand, the result comes out in the form of destruction. Ukraine is getting destroyed But an attack on it could cost Russia itself economically and strategically. Now it is certain that if China tries to dominate Taiwan or any other country, then it will also get a blow of resistance. Even after this, at the moment it seems impossible to control the increasing trend of using force against other also strengthen friendship with the enemies of such countries and build their strong alliance. Remember that only a mixture of self-reliance and factionalism will prove to be helpful in getting rid of a type of jungle raj growing in the world.
